I don't think it has much influence over me

Most of the time when using YouTube I know what I'm looking for so the algorithm does not play a large role until after I've finished watching a channel that I'm subscribed to. At this stage, I enjoy many of its recommendations, however sometimes the algorithm is completely unrelated to what I would typically watch.

Na

They understand what I would be interested in watching.

It does a decent job showing content I may enjoy, however my account is old and has plenty of data to see what types of content I watch.

A lot, even when searching for something, the results are often suggested based on browsing history

I think it makes assumptions based on what I "like" and then continues to send similar videos to my feed.

No social media

I'm sure they have, but I pretty strictly limit myself. Between all algo-driven sites, I probably spend less than 10 mins a day

It definitely plays impact, I'm more inclined with social media algorithms which I'm sure are similar to YouTube. My algorithms are pretty consistent so I believe it stops me from branching out to other interests.

At times influence what I watch, as I may have not looked for it before. I do not like all the Adds . The adds have become so much more and just so annoying.

Social media apps have changed a lot throughout the years, and it's pretty crazy how much it has evolved in the 20+ years. I would say it definitely tries to recommend content that is def tailored towards me. For example I'll watch maybe like 2-3 gaming videos, then I'll have more 5 more pop up in my recommended.

I think there is a big push for creators to get in front of the audience. With so much competitions I do think there is a heavy push in social media platforms to get as much views from various people not just the ones searching for the specific content! They almost have to be creative enough to engage people that wouldn't normally see their videos. So yes YouTube does a pretty good job of giving you some solid recommendations but sometimes they do throw a few things that I would never normally see, but if it has a good title or thumbnail image then I might just click it.

It has better options for my Korean dramas where the other platforms are only for super short films

It's being influenced by me mostly, but often times I can see it trying to get me to try new things that I can see logic in but it's just so brazenly not what I like. I actually just report the channels and videos I get recommended and don't want to see.

They have mildly guided me to newer interests, but nothing too far off what I would normally watch.

The algorithms employed within these platforms definitely guide users toward specific media and away from others, even if it usually goes unnoticed

I think they are solid, sometime it goes of track they've opened interest to more topics i would haven never thought on searching up before.

No influence because I'm the influencer

These platforms are big influences. They can flood one's feed with topics or ideas that you may or may not agree with. Then you click on what you like.

Not really!

I feel like once I watch 2 of the same/similar videos that's all YouTube puts on my recommended for me

A lot, because often I'm not even looking for specific videos I just play whatever is on the feed and usually it is tailored to my interested heavily. Especially on TikTok where we rely on the for you page which quickly adapts to the things you like and comment on.

It feels a bit scary at times but I can't deny how convenient it is to have a video already chosen out on the homepage when YouTube finds a video I might like. Especially with Instagram, their addictive platform of consuming reel after reel, like other social media platforms have done, just leaves the user feeling drained and addicted. Now their taking measures to stop it like doing timed sessions but it just shouldn't have been created in the first place.

I only watch things i look up

YouTube does it the best when it comes to recommendations, all other apps just spew out random videos I don't watch

I feel great that they show platforms that help me understand what is it I need to know facts and information.

Thank you!
